

The Finnish Co-operative Research Association Kooperatiivi

The Finnish Association of Co-operative Research Kooperatiivi was established in 1984 to promote research on economic collaboration by forming a national network of researchers interested in the subject matter. Many members of the association carry out research studies on cooperation or other economic collaboration in different Finnish Universities. Additionally, the association collaborates globally with the network of researchers formed within the research committee of the International Co-operative Alliance (ICA).

The task of the association is to boost utilization of research and scientific knowledge on the voluntary economic collaboration of people and organizations in order to solve societal problems and development challenges. As part of the task of the association, workshops, seminars, conferences and webinars are organized to a large audience aiming at the progress of researchers and enhancing knowledge on economic collaboration and cooperation.
